The Reunification Palace, also known as the Independence Palace, is listed as a historical monument by witnessing great changes of Ho Chi Minh City's history throughout the Vietnamese war.

The origin of the Reunification Palace was dated back in 1858, when the French colonists began to attack Da Nang, starting the war against Vietnam. In 1868, the French government started to design and build a mansion called Norodom Palace (the original name of today Reunification Palace). It served as a place for the Southern Government in the center of Ho Chi Minh City. In 1955, Ngo Dinh Diem, who became the new president of Southern Vietnam, lived in Norodom Palace. Finally, in the historic Ho Chi Minh campaign in 1975, Vietnam gained their victory and reunited the whole country, the Reunification Palace was the place where the Vietnamese Revolutionary Army won their battle. Nowadays, the Palace is a special national place visited by many domestic and foreign tourists. The place is also a meeting destination for guests of all levels and city leaders.

The building was built on an area of 12 hectares, including a large mansion with a width of 80 meters. Inside the Palace, there is a huge living room which can hold up to 800 people and a large garden with many trees and lawns. Besides the absolutely outstanding architecture, visitors are also in love with the unique artifacts displayed inside the Reunification Palace. Most of these are vehicles such as helicopters, tanks and cars that served either Ngo Dinh Diem or the Vietnamese Revolutionary Army.

The Reunification Palace is not only a historical symbol of Ho Chi Minh City but also the pride of the Vietnamese. Exploring this historic site will be a memorable experience, especially for foreign visitors who are keen on the heroic past of Vietnam. If you are a history lover, this will be a place that definitely cannot be missed.
